

Amanda Brown, MHA

Manager

Amanda assists Veralon clients with financial analysis, modeling, and business valuations. She prepares analyses and client deliverables for a variety of strategic and financial engagements. Her clients have included health systems, academic medical centers, community hospitals, ACOs, and CINs.

Amanda's experience includes:

- Strategic, business, and financial planning for healthcare organizations, including a large DSRIP Pay for Performance five-year plan and financial projections for the possible acquisition of a medical center by a health plan
- Physician compensation arrangements and plans, including designing a compensation model for a large hospital-owned pediatric physician network; she also works on Veralon's annual compensation survey
- Business valuations for IPAs and ACOs, and a pediatric cardiology practice, and valuation of lease arrangements
- Structuring medical lease arrangements

Prior to joining Veralon as an Associate, Amanda interned at Veralon, supporting valuation analyses, strategic and business planning efforts, and value-based payment and care delivery models research.

Amanda holds a Master of Health Administration from the Sloan Program at Cornell University. She also received a BS in Biometry and Statistics from Cornell University with a minor in Applied Economics and Management.
